Manufacturing & Logistics

Manufacturing and logistics are interconnected sectors that help form the essential building blocks of the supply chain in countless industries, among them food & beverages, consumer goods, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, electronics, motor vehicles, building materials, and industrial/commercial products. While manufacturing generally involves the transformation of raw materials into finished products or components, logistics deals with the planning, execution and control of moving those goods from the point of origin to the point of consumption, including transportation, warehousing, distribution and inventory management. Greenbaum supports clients ranging from closely held businesses to global entities involved in all aspects of manufacturing and logistics on both the B2B and B2C fronts. Our broad service profile enables us to meet the full spectrum of legal needs, from corporate and real estate transactions to regulatory guidance to dispute resolution and litigation.
